

The Postman

A postman is a useful public servant. He is welcome everywhere because he brings letters from friends and relatives. He delivers parcels and money orders, etc. Without the services of a postmen, life would be paralyzed to a great extent.

A postman can be seen here and there delivering the mail to the addresses. He wears khaki uniform. He can be seen riding a bicycle. He carries the letters in his bag. His work is full of difficulties. He arranges the letters in order. He goes from door to door to distribute the letter and money-orders. He brings the good and bad news from the relatives. A postman's duty is to deliver the letters, parcels, money orders etc.

His duties are very hard. He has to work under scorching sun and pouring rains. His job is very tough. He reaches for his duty at right time. He is a useful member of the society. He has to keep smiling against all odds. We should respect him for his hard labour.

He is a link between friend and realties. He keeps them in touch by his quick and regular service. So are businessman benefited by him. They reward him for his good service in festivals.

The postman's life is very hard. His salary is very low. His holidays and leisure hours are very few. The Government should raise his salary and lighten his work. The postal department should try to improve his lot.

With the coming up of courier services, e-mail system, the postmen are losing their charm. People have started sending their mails through computers. In the present circumstances, the future of postmen is not bright.
